Sustainable Engineering Society Dinner 4 June 2013 Sponsorship Opportunity

On Tuesday 4 June 2013 the Queensland committee of the Sustainable Engineering Society (SENG) is hosting dinner with guest speaker Rod Quantock at the Ship Inn in Brisbane.

Rod is a renowned Australian comedian and author of The Wonderful World of Climate Change. A legend of Australian live comedy, Rod is a comedian, writer, director and producer. Rod will make us laugh about the not so funny topic of Global Warming, on the topic of which he is quoted: "If climate change doesn't scare you shitless, then you just don't get the science." He will also give us some ideas on how we can better engage with others in discussing the topic. Mr Rod Quantock appears by arrangement with Saxton Speakers Bureau.

It is our pleasure to invite your cooperation in supporting this event.

We believe that events like this are important to provide sustainability and engineering professionals with a forum to discuss and debate, along with the opportunity to network and socialise with like minded individuals. It is our intent to subsidise the event to allow SENG and Engineers Australia members and others to attend at a reasonable cost.

Sponsors logos will be shown on all advertising flyers for the event, and will be publicly acknowledged with logos prominently displayed during the evening. Sponsors will be welcome to display an organisational banner at the dinner, and to distribute promotional materials at the event.

Your company logo will be included on the SENG event web page advertising the event, and will be kept on the page when archived. For example, you may wish to view the saved event pages for our Student Awards nights.

A total sponsorship of $3000 is being sought. Each sponsorship of $1000 will include one registration to attend the dinner.

Event details:
